You can display completed writing prompts with a flat trunk, or have students accordion-fold it for a bit of 3D pizzazz. I've also included a clover pattern that you can run off on pink paper. Tape it to a strip of paper or green pipe cleaner and attach the back of the stem to his trunk. A student photo on it adds that finishing touch.

Who: Horton

What: He saves Whoville

Why: He cares, he promised "a person's a person no matter how small."

When: Day and night he protects them.

Where: In the jungle.

How: He saves them by having everyone in Whoville make noise, so the jungle animals can hear.

Remember to READ!

You don't have to put the little "reminder" strip in the top right hand corner, or tie a ribbon or yarn bow on Elmer's trunk, but since "Elephants never forget." I thought they added some extra pizzazz, and my students enjoyed doing this.

I had my students complete the prompt: "Reading colors me _____." but you could skip the speech bubble, or give your kiddos a different prompt. Possibly advice from an elephant…

Because I knew my students would ask, I wanted to know if this colloquialism was true.
After reading a variety of articles, I found some wonderful scientific research that does show that elephants have outstanding memories. One of my favorite articles can be found here:

Tally Time

After you have circled all of the letters, you will make a tally mark.

It is quicker to go through 1 sentence at a time and look for each letter at the same time, rather than to look for the e's and then the h's etc.

Letter e	157 e's	157
Letter h	65 h's	65
Letter s	63 s's	63
Letter w	12 w's	11
Grand total of all of the letters	296 letters in all.	296

Any surprises? Yes. I thought there would be more S's than H's.

Graphing Time

Prediction: I think I will find more e's and that letter w will be the least number of letters found.

Reality: I found the most e and the least amount of w's.

How many of each of the following letters did you find?

Color ONE box for every FIVE that you found. On the top box, put any remaining. ie. if you found 12 W's you'd color in 2 boxes and put the number 2 in the top box above those colored boxes.
